

Question : What is a thermocouple sensor?

Answer: A thermocouple sensor is a common type of sensor that measures temperature. The sensor includes two dissimilar electrical metal conductors joined at one end to form an electrical junction, which is where the temperature is measured.